

Pet Therapy

Cooper

Pet Therapy

Cooper

Pet Therapy

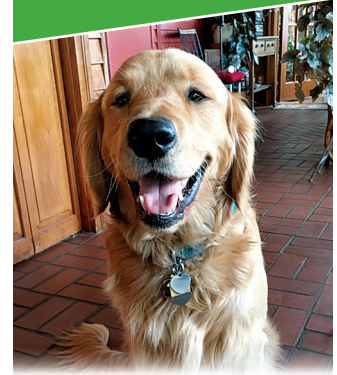

Cooper

Pet Therapy

Cooper

Pet Therapy

Cooper

MAURY REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER

MAURY REGIONAL
MEDICAL CENTER

MAURY REGIONAL
MEDICAL CENTER

MAURY REGIONAL
MEDICAL CENTER

MAURY REGIONAL
MEDICAL CENTER

Pet therapy is a program developed by the Maury Regional Medical Center Volunteer Services Department to brighten the stay of patients in our care.

Studies have shown that physical contact with a pet can lower anxiety, reduce high blood pressure and, in some cases, cause the release of endorphins, chemicals in the body that help to suppress the pain response.

For more information about the program, becoming a volunteer or arranging a pet visit, please contact Volunteer Services at 931.380.4047.

Cooper is a golden retriever who lives on a farm in Williamson County. When Cooper is not visiting patients and staff in his role as a therapy dog, he enjoys working on the farm. Cooper travels daily to Nashville where he can be found attending yoga classes and seeing clients with his owner.

Pet therapy is a program developed by the Maury Regional Medical Center Volunteer Services Department to brighten the stay of patients in our care.

Studies have shown that physical contact with a pet can lower anxiety, reduce high blood pressure and, in some cases, cause the release of endorphins, chemicals in the body that help to suppress the pain response.

For more information about the program, becoming a volunteer or arranging a pet visit, please contact Volunteer Services at 931.380.4047.

Cooper is a golden retriever who lives on a farm in Williamson County. When Cooper is not visiting patients and staff in his role as a therapy dog, he enjoys working on the farm. Cooper travels daily to Nashville where he can be found attending yoga classes and seeing clients with his owner.

Pet therapy is a program developed by the Maury Regional Medical Center Volunteer Services Department to brighten the stay of patients in our care.

Studies have shown that physical contact with a pet can lower anxiety, reduce high blood pressure and, in some cases, cause the release of endorphins, chemicals in the body that help to suppress the pain response.

For more information about the program, becoming a volunteer or arranging a pet visit, please contact Volunteer Services at 931.380.4047.

Cooper is a golden retriever who lives on a farm in Williamson County. When Cooper is not visiting patients and staff in his role as a therapy dog, he enjoys working on the farm. Cooper travels daily to Nashville where he can be found attending yoga classes and seeing clients with his owner.

Pet therapy is a program developed by the Maury Regional Medical Center Volunteer Services Department to brighten the stay of patients in our care.

Studies have shown that physical contact with a pet can lower anxiety, reduce high blood pressure and, in some cases, cause the release of endorphins, chemicals in the body that help to suppress the pain response.

For more information about the program, becoming a volunteer or arranging a pet visit, please contact Volunteer Services at 931.380.4047.

Cooper is a golden retriever who lives on a farm in Williamson County. When Cooper is not visiting patients and staff in his role as a therapy dog, he enjoys working on the farm. Cooper travels daily to Nashville where he can be found attending yoga classes and seeing clients with his owner.

Pet therapy is a program developed by the Maury Regional Medical Center Volunteer Services Department to brighten the stay of patients in our care.

Studies have shown that physical contact with a pet can lower anxiety, reduce high blood pressure and, in some cases, cause the release of endorphins, chemicals in the body that help to suppress the pain response.

For more information about the program, becoming a volunteer or arranging a pet visit, please contact Volunteer Services at 931.380.4047.

Cooper is a golden retriever who lives on a farm in Williamson County. When Cooper is not visiting patients and staff in his role as a therapy dog, he enjoys working on the farm. Cooper travels daily to Nashville where he can be found attending yoga classes and seeing clients with his owner.